Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: .away by the Dairy Schools and the creamery press is beginning to bring results in improved creamery buildings and improved grounds. Most creameries, when they rebuild, or new ones starting pay some attention nowadays, to looks as well as utility. This pays in the long run, because an up to date creamery building, set in attractive surroundings, exercises an influence all down the line. The patron gets an object lesson in neatness and beautiful surroundings, and the creamery management and buttermaker try to live up to their environment The good work goes on, and better butter and better patrons is the result. These few remarks were called forth at this time by seeing a photograph of the new Glencoe Creamery, of Glencoe, Minn., which shows a modern creamery building with a little landscape gardening, the whole effect being very desirable, and will do much to encourage more and better dairying, not only in that immediate vicinity but for a considerable distance in all directions. If the county agents and agricultural workers in adjacent counties would run little excursions to the Glencoe plant, they would be doing something for their neighborhood that we believe would eventually be productive of untold benefit. Here is a little hint that may be utilized to the very greatest advantage. The National Poultry, Butter and Egg Association has started a movement to decrease the amount of storage holdings of butter and eggs by sending a telegram to President Wilson lately, quoting an...
