Yours fair princess, dare you so far trust me yet, To let me kiss your hand? Eug. Audacious! sir, , I shall grow lowd, if you forget your distance Nor that you may hold long I m studying how I should be rid of him without their Knowledge: yet that s dangerous too, and might Shew guilt in me, for he will boast on t. Rol. Such was the duke, your gracious father s care, He would put confidence in none about him, But faw me brought himself. Eug. This is a sine paradox. Rol. Which must be to high purpose: come, be wise, And keep me while you have me, tis but reaping This fruitless harvest, from my cheek and chin, And you can form the rest. Y are young and beautisul Lose not the blessing of your youth, sweet princess, fair opportunity waits upou your pleasure, You want but the sirst knowledge of your joy. Your blood is ripe; come, I am consident Your will is but controuPd by upstart fears, Like advane d beggers, that will cheek their princi My fafest way is yours now to conceal me, It may be thought I have injoy d you else; HI censure soon takes sire, nay perhaps, To be reveng d of your stern...
